Fire Fighters Designs Flying Water Wagon

PORT SULPHUR, La. — The Mississippi river is close at hand, but the Port Sulphur Volunteer Fire Department takes chances of being caught with out water.
Because the flames frequently threaten homes and other communities, some of which are too far inland to make stringing of hose lines to the river feasible, they take their water supply right with them.
It's carried in a "flying water wagon," specially designed in the shops of Freeprest Sulphur Company here. The apparatus consists of a 2500-gallon tank mounted on a truck and is operated in conjunction with an other mobile unit known as a "front pump". The pump sends water from the tank through the hose at a rate of 400 gallons a minute.
A 25-mile area is served by the fire company, most of whose personnel are Freeprest employees who live with their families in a model townsite community owned by the company when it opened its nearby Grande Esaille sulphur mine 16 years ago.

Delaware Towns Expand as U. S. Steel Constructs New Mill

MORRISVILLE, Pa. — Growing pains are bothering the small communities on the Delaware river between Yardley and Bristol a short distance from the $400,000,000 steel mill being constructed by United States Steel company.
The most pressing needs are increased traffic facilities, enlarged local government services, expanded school operations, hospital accommodations, new business centers and more public transportation.
Two major development corporations are currently engaged in constructing self-contained towns for some 10,000 persons, expected to keep pace with housing requirements, barring a sudden influx of workers to the steel plant and allied industries in the area.
One company will soon complete the first 1,100 home unit of Fairless Mills. The other is rising a 1,200 unit rolling mill plant at Oxford, Pa., four miles west of the new steel plant. Ultimately it is to have from 3,500 to 4,000 prefabricated houses, plus more than a score of custom built dwellings.
Another company is busy with the initial construction phase of "a complete city of 16,000 homes" on a 2,000 acre tract.
Erection of the Fairless works which began last March, has gone well. At present, some 6,000 construction workers are engaged in the project on the river front. In the same area, sites are being set aside for churches and the erection of a high school.
The other modern Bucks county community will be known as Lehigh

Tiling Spades Are Made Exclusively in Iowa Town

WEBSTER CITY, Iowa—Three small towns in Iowa have been the home of the only tiling spade manufacturer in the world.
Today the only manufacturer of the implement is located in Webster City. It was invented over a half century ago near Anamosa, Iowa, and the first factory was located there. Later a plant was started in Perry, Iowa, and still later the plant at Webster City was started.
According to A. G. Omondson, head of the company manufacturing the spade, it is strictly an Iowa product—a bar or skeleton type spade. It is used where the soil is wet, muddy and sticky, such as drainage of swamps and sloughs. Being a skeleton type, it is easier to push into the soil and there is less surface for the mud to cling to and the air gets behind the lead so it is easier to release it.

Town Wants U. S. Loan To Raise Employees' Pay

ITHACA, N.Y. — The mayor of Ithaca, Stanley C. Shaw, has asked President Truman for a million dollars to give city employees a pay boost.
"Of course, this request is ridiculous," the mayor said in a letter to the president. "However, it is no more sound than the report of a promised loan to a country (Iran) that is destroying one of the world's great monuments."
"We also have been informed that Prime Minister Churchill will be seeing you for the purpose of getting another loan for England," he letter said.
He then asked for the loan to give the city employees a "see so they can meet the increased income tax that you just had the congress to enact."
